BIG MOONSHINE PLANT FOUND NEAR M'DAVID

SHERIFF AD DEPUTIES DESTROY FOUR STILL OUTFITS AND FOUR 60-GALLON BARRELS OF RIPE MASH.

That there was at least one very "wet" spot in Escambia yesterday was attested last night by Sheriff J. C. Van Pelt and his deputies, Hall and Rowman, and Deputy U. S. Marshal Cuyler McMillan, upon their return from a raiding trip up near McDavid, in the northern portion of the county.

During a drenching rain the officers left their automobile and waded into a swamp about six miles northwest of McDavid, where they had expected to find a "moonshine" plant operating full blast, but they were a little too early or else the operators had been "tipped" off.

Four 60-gallon barrels of beer or mash, ripe and ready for the run, were found and the worms and other paraphernalia sufficient for the setting up of four distilleries. With an axe the beer barrels were demolished and also the still outfits except the iron worms which were brought into town.

According to "expert" mash estimators in the raiding party, the beer destroyed was sufficient in quantity to have produced at least 30 gallons of Georgia "white lightning," for which the prevailing prices, since the state became bone dry is $24 per gallon.

The officers have information which they expect will lead to the arrest of those responsible for the plant, which gave evidence of having been operated on the occasion of several previous runs.

SHIP AGENCY MARKS PASSING OF THE CRIMP

Washington, April 30.—The Crimp, one of the ugliest figures in the predatory forces, collectively known as "land sharks," that once preyed unchecked on the merchant sailor ashore, must give up his grip on Jack when he is in American ports.

The recent establishment by the U. S. Shipping board of a government shipping agency of national scope, to place seamen in jobs afloat, will put the crimp out of business. The crimp thrived on extravagant fees, often collected twice, that is, from the ship operator and the sailor. Without them he cannot continue his activities.

The Shipping board agency, known as the sea service bureau, aims not only to protect the seaman and the ship owner against extortion, but to stabilize the supply of mariners at various ports, by shipping men to ports where most needed, prepaying their fares, and looking after their subsistence in transit.

This service will be rendered at cost, and a nominal fee of so much a man will be charged the ship operator calling for men. In no instance will the mariner be put to expense in getting a job.

In a bulletin just issued to ship operators, Capt. L. L. Evans, chief of the sea service bureau, states that it is the desire and intention of the bureau "to reduce the cost of placing mariners in employment to a minimum," and that the initial fee of $2.50 a man, to be charged at first, will be reduced as soon as conditions justify a reduction.

Ship operators are notified that the bureau aims to furnish officers and crews upon request to "any and all American ships, whether under private or government operation."

Co-operation of ship owners and operators in driving out the "crimp" is invited by the sea service bureau in this bulletin, and owners are also invited to make suggestions looking to possible extension of the services of the bureau to ports not now covered by its branches. Administrative headquarters of the bureau are at the headquarters of the Shipping Board's recruiting service at Boston, and its largest shipping office has just been opened at 74 to 80 Washington street, New York. Here several thousand American seamen, firemen and stewards find employment every month, including hundreds of young lads graduated from the shipping board's training ships and going to sea on their first voyage.

Times Changing For Jack.

The passing of the crimp is the most recent in a number of changes in conditions affecting American sailors when ashore that taken together constitute a complete departure from old-time standards of what was considered good enough for Jack.

Into the discard which now receives the crimp went some years ago the sailors' dance hall, and its attendant sisterhood, who welcomed Jack ashore, entertained him until his money was gone, and turned him over to the crimp, who in nine cases out of ten was a boarding house keeper.

The sailor's boarding house itself, as it was known in earlier days, has suffered eclipses by the welfare centers, where, in a great clean building a sailor may get a neat bed for thirty cents a night or so, and meals at proportionate cost, and where he can play games, attend lectures and "movie" shows and mingle socially with sober and self-respecting companions.

Net on the list to go will be the sailor's grog shop, which now is on its last legs. With that gone, the props of the old system for debauching Jack and plucking him, will have been sent to Lavy Jones' locker. Few will mourn the event, for a new style of sailor is coming into the merchant marine—a sailor to whom old-time excesses ashore would not appeal, and on whom the "land shark" would not get fat.

Crimps Were Artists in Guile.

The crimp will not go out of business willingly. He has too recent memory of days when to be a crimp was to conduct a business of profit.

There are many crimps in business today who recall with professional pride the days of strong-arm methods in the merchant marine.
